Find out how Holland, Michigan is built on energy

U.S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Dear Chamber Executive,

Today we launched the latest video in our Energy Strong series where we highlight the everyday impact of the American energy industry on our communities, country and the world.

With a major decision looming about their energy future, the city of Holland, Michigan's Board of Public Works turned to Siemens for an innovative solution. With the community's support and Siemens technology, the Holland Energy Park was developed.

This natural gas facility incorporates cutting edge technology to not only power the city, but also provide an expanded snowmelt system, the largest in the US, to keep roads and sidewalks clear during Holland's tough winters. The result is a thriving downtown and a partnership that demonstrates how energy powers communities.

America's energy industry changes our world every day. From empowering an entire high-tech workforce, to improving communities and the lives of their citizens, to providing critical aid following natural disasters, the energy industry's impact is unparalleled.

GEI is immensely proud of the energy industry's contribution to the world around it and excited to tell their stories. Please stay tuned for more inspiring stories from America's energy industry.

Sincerely,

Sue Forrester
